(In English with immediate German Translation)*

Do you ever dream of living a life full of purpose? What would that look like? How would you feel? If you knew everything in your life served a greater purpose, wouldn't you be happy doing whatever you had to do? Of course, you would be. You'd be thrilled to do whatever helped you reach your destination. After all, when we drag our feet about doing something it's usually because we're afraid of doing it or because we would rather be doing something else. In a purpose-inspired life, however, we won't be looking over our shoulder for what might hurt us and we won't be looking elsewhere for what we'd rather be doing. It's the fulfilling of our purpose that would give us our greatest joy. We wouldn't need to look for anything better.

Whenever we find ourselves unhappy, it's never for the reason we think. We become unhappy because we've temporarily lost sight of the source of our joy - our purpose for being. Then, we begin to look everywhere but within our own self in our attempts to find some degree of happiness. We look elsewhere because we believe that since we are unhappy, happiness is somewhere besides where we are. We reason that if happiness was within us already, we'd be happy. Reasonable, but not true. The source of our greatest joy, the only thing that would make us truly happy, is completely within us. Yet, most of us lost sight of that wellspring of total joy. It's as if we suddenly found ourselves shrouded in darkness in a total solar eclipse without knowing what was causing it or that it was temporary. We panicked and started looking everywhere for our lost light and warmth. In our desperate searching, we ended up going deep into an underground cavern where we learned to live in the darkness and didn't realize that the sun was still shining above ground. Yet, we aren't meant to live in a dark cave, separated from the source of our light and life. Somehow, we must find our way back to where the sun is forever shining, giving life to all.

Our true purpose as souls shines more brightly than a thousand suns within our own being. It continuously calls to us to turn inward and search more deeply within ourselves. For a long time, a soul disregards the call, not believing it to be true. Instead, the soul tries to escape the darkness it believes is in itself by seeking its home in the outer world. It reasons that whenever it closes its eyes, since everything turns dark and the brightness only returns when it opens its eyes to the world, it must follow that the source of light is out in the world and not within itself. It then seeks worldly comforts and pleasures in place of true fulfillment and happiness. Yet, sooner or later, the soul gains enough wisdom to realize that even the greatest of worldly pleasure and gain will not bring it deep and lasting fulfillment. It realizes that everything in this world is fleeting. Finally, the soul turns its attention inward in search for the truth of its own existence.

If you are reading this, as a soul you have already experienced that turning point some lifetimes ago. You've been on the homeward leg of your journey for some time. You are at the point in your spiritual development that awakening your inner soul creativity, imagination, clairvoyance, and intuition has become essential to not only your well-being, but to your continued growth. There are many aspects of your life and purpose you can no longer fulfill by traditional physical and intellectual means alone. You may have already experienced at times that you cannot heal yourself in traditional ways or that your most intimate relationships no longer work in the same way they did before. You may find that you don't have the same ambitions for things of the world as you had before. You are stepping up into a new arena of life that requires greater awareness and clarity as well as access to more of your inner creative power. You cannot transcend the limitations in your life unless you first free more of your imagination. You'll also need to expand your ability to see the more subtle, psychic aspects of life, as well as develop your certainty in Spirit and live more intuitively. You are more than ready now to not only "think outside the box", but to live outside the box of assumed worldly limitations. You are here to fully live your soul purpose with joy - and it is in the living of your soul purpose that you will find your truth, love, and joy.

If you've been dreaming of waking up each morning inspired by purpose, we welcome you to join us in this extraordinary weekend seminar. If you've been wanting to know that everything happens in your life in support of you fulfilling your soul purpose, then, by all means, come be with us for these two days to explore, experience, discover, and grow. Each day will be overflowing with compassion, wisdom, and laughter. Get to know yourself more as the joyful spirit with limitless creativity and imagination that you truly are. Practice developing your clairvoyance so that you can see your inner light and learn to live a miraculous life by following your intuition and fulfilling your purpose. You are more than ready. Live your purpose with joy!

I'm looking forward to seeing you in the beautiful city of Zürich.
