Celebrating Your Joyous Freedom

LIVE THE MIRACLE
and
BE THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD!

*Dear SHAPE Community, Graduates of Clairvoyant Programs,
AHA! and Our Psychic Tools & Life Mastery Practices,*

How would you celebrate your freedom? It would depend on what freedom means to you at the time you experience it. Most of us probably don't celebrate our freedom daily, unless feel like we've gained some profound degree of freedom we've been struggling to attain. For some, freedom might mean getting free from a job they've had to endure for years just to barely provide for their family with no chance for advancement. Then, suddenly they find themselves the recipient of an unexpected windfall and they no longer have to worry about working themselves to the bones. I'm sure such a person would joyously celebrate their miracle and newfound freedom from drudgery and back-breaking work. They might experience enormous gratitude for their freedom for some time to come.

Someone who had spent years in prison wrongly accused and convicted for something they never did would mostly likely experience indescribable relief, when they are released from their incarceration after new incontrovertible evidence fully exonerates them. If a person facing certain-death due to having an incurable condition suddenly experiences a miraculous healing, there's no doubt that they will rejoice in gratitude and relief in having been spared what appeared to be their only outcome. Yet, is relief from a terrifying fate, no matter how extraordinary it might be, true freedom?

I, for one, would never even consider taking away one moment of celebrating anyone's experience of such profound relief—or even a minor one—but, it's not ultimately the experience of true freedom, is it? Just as peace is not the experience of the absence of violence or conflicts, but a true presence of loving stillness and undivided joy, freedom is not merely an absence of external control, injustice, or terror. Freedom is the never-ending certainty of the Infinite Absolute.

If you hold to my teachings, you are really my disciples.
Then you will know the truth and truth will set you free.

- Jesus

Spirit, of course, is always and forever free. Undivided in its nature, Spirit is eternal and without any limits. We are that Spirit, each and every one of us incarnated here in this divided world. Yet, being incarnated in a body in this divided world as undivided Spirit is quite the conundrum, isn't it? The moment we enter into a human body-mind here, we are bombarded with sensory perception data based on a divided, binary algorithm. At first, it doesn't seem to matter whether we want all that input or not. It's like we're force-fed the information: In a way, it says to our native awareness, "Welcome to the world. This defines your new reality."

Let's say that you were living in a place cradled in the most tranquil and beautiful nature for years. You would experience that as your norm, your reality. Then, suddenly, your peaceful home becomes the target for some despot, who declares war against your place and people, seeking to claim all of it as their possession. Gunfire and massive explosions become your daily existence. Does a major part of your awareness get focused on the incessant violence and threat on your very survival? What happened to your experience of that tranquil and beautiful home of yours? It is still there, but the cacophony and destruction of war overwhelms your senses, and after a while, the beauty and peace you were accustomed to becomes a distant memory and no longer your reality.

Incarnating here in this world is a bit like that. It's easy to lose our awareness of what our true reality is, always has been, and will always be, when we are suddenly thrust into a mind-body that perceives the divided world as the only reality. Then, our first order of business seems to be learning to survive in it. Hypnotized by this worldly video game we've entered into, as one of several billion avatars playing the game, we tend to forget that we are only in made-up world to play and learn. That we are infinite, eternal, and immortal creative spirit becomes a faint memory to us. All of our bodily organs of sense perception continuously feed us the apparent reality of the video game world, much like a player might experience when wearing virtual reality goggles. Absorbed in the fantasy world, they may forget the reality of their living room and everyday life.

The best news is, however, that truth seeps through the veil of the illusory world for those of us who sincerely seek it. Beyond the illusion of the game, never-changing truth and reality shine on. As Jesus said, "He who has ears, let him hear." We could perhaps add to that, "To all those who have eyes, let them see." Once we sneak a glimpse beyond the virtual reality of the game world, we begin to realize that there is a reality far more important than that of spending our daily life trying to gain the whole world—or even a small part of it. "What if a man gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Once we begin to deprogram ourselves from the conviction that the virtual world is reality, we become committed to seeking out the truth of who we are, where we are from, and for what purpose we are here. Intuitively we know that truth will set us free and we embark upon our path of freedom.

One who neither hates nor desires the fruits of his activities is known to be always renounced. Such a person, free from all dualities, easily overcomes material bondage. And is completed liberated, O mighty-armed Arjuna.

- Krishna, Bhagavad Gita 5:3

In the beginning, we may still seek freedom by trying to free ourselves from external control or pain and suffering. Yet, as we progress on our path, we begin to discover that freedom doesn't come from us trying to free ourselves from whatever we might believe is controlling or limiting us in some way. We gradually begin to realize that freedom is what we already have as spirit. We just have to experience the reality of our God-given freedom and relate to this illusory world with that certainty. Then, we learn to own our invincibility in this dream world—just as we discover that nothing in a dream during our sleep state can harm us.

If this whole world is but a dream or a hyper-realistic video game, what makes our sensory perception of it convince us that it is reality and not merely an illusion? It seems to exist and function on repeatable cycles of causes and effects. For example, whenever you successfully pick up a golden coin in the game, you always get an extra boost of energy. But if you don't collect enough gold coins during a set period of game play, you die. There appears to be an irrefutable law that governs the world as well. To every action, there is an equal and opposite reaction. It appears that all of those laws require a certain underlying structure or organization to work consistently. It seems that the basic foundation of our experience of living in this world is predicated upon our experience of the passage of time and that of movement through space. We assume that there is always a yesterday and a tomorrow to our experience of today. We are constantly experiencing moving through space. Even if we are sitting perfectly still in one space, if we are breathing, our upper body is moving an inch or more from one space to another with each cycle of respiration. Time and space seem to be a solid foundation upon which our worldly reality is built.

While we dream during our sleep, we experience everything as reality, complete with the passage of time and movement through space. Even if we have no clue as to what we were supposedly "doing" before we started dreaming in the middle of some story action, we assume that there was a past and we are moving forward to our future. It's only when we begin to question what we were doing before our awareness of our dream action and for what purpose we are doing what we seem to be doing in the dream that the seeming "reality" of the dream begins to collapse. The moment the dream reality no longer stands up to our scrutiny, we can become lucid within our dreaming. We step out of the experience of the passage of time and the movement through space. We discover the total clarity and certainty that our experience is nothing but a dream and not reality. We are in the quiet and joyous stillness beyond time and space. We've entered into the eternal present and transcended the illusion of our dream as reality. We realize our complete freedom that has always been ours even if we continue to be in the dream. We are

Part Four: Time and Eternity

*NO rack can torture me,
My soul's at liberty.
Behind this mortal bone
There knits a bolder one

You cannot prick with saw,
Nor rend with scymitar.
Two bodies therefore be;
Bind one, and one will flee.

The eagle of his nest
No easier divest
And gain the sky,
Than mayest thou,

Except thyself may be
Thine enemy;
Captivity is consciousness,
So's liberty.*

- Emily Dickinson

no longer a hostage to our dreaming, to the video game, to the world. We discover that we may be in the world, but that we were never of it.

Forgive and you are free.
